

“Main Justice” is the informal name for Department of Justice headquarters at 9th and Pennsylvania Avenue NW. It is also Washington short-hand for the leadership and top prosecutors and lawyers at the Justice Department.

In April, 2009 Main Justice was launched. We quickly achieved “must-read” status among a high-influence community of law enforcers, lawyers, corporate counsel, the judiciary and Capitol Hill policy staff. We also are reaching officials of the FBI, DEA, ATF, think tanks and general readers interested in Justice Department issues. We are often quoted by mainstream media.

Main Justice covers the legal community in and around the Department of Justice. Our goal is to provide insider information about the nation's top federal law enforcers, lawyers and legal policy makers. We also follow developments on Capitol Hill and the inner workings of the 94 U.S. Attorney offices around the country. Main Justice is the only news site which focuses on the upper echelon of the nation's legal world, from the Attorney General to US Attorneys.

We cover the leadership inside DOJ as a “public policy community”. Main Justice is written for them and about them. We also give extensive coverage to key areas of DOJ enforcement: antitrust, false claims, FCPA compliance, white collar and a vast array of corporate legal topics.

Main Justice became an affiliate publication of The Washington Post Co.'s “moderated Wiki” format site WhoRunsGov in September, 2009. In December we launched two new vertical sites under the Main Justice banner focusing exclusively on Corruption & Compliance and Antitrust.
